Dear Friends of Children,

Being a parent is a tough job. Across the Commonwealth, there are many organizations which offer a variety of programs to help parents as they perform what is their most important job. These programs, called family support services, offer all parents a chance to enhance their parenting skills and connect with other parents for mutual support. Through these programs parents also learn how to obtain any assistance they or their children might need.

Family support services only work if they are easy for parents to find. This directory provides a resource for parents and professionals who are looking for the following assistance:

Parent Support Groups	Helplines
Parent Aides	Homemakers
Parent Education Groups	In-Home Visitors

Child Welfare Specialists from the Office for Children in communities throughout the state offer in depth information and referral to these and other resources for parents in Massachusetts. There is also a statewide network of Child Care Resource and Referral agencies, funded in part by the Office, which provide information and consultation to parents who need child care.

All parents need support, both as individuals and as parents, at some point in their lives. The Office for Children believes that there should be a range of easily accessible supportive services for parents in every community in the state. It is our hope that this directory points the way to the resources available to families now, and helps identify what is still needed in many of our communities.

Sincerely,

Mary Kay Leonard

Mary Kay Leonard
Commissioner

Introduction

Family Support Services in Massachusetts share a similar history with other national family support programs. According to Bernice Weissbourd in America's Family Support Programs (Yale University Press, 1987), they grew out of an explosion of parent support and education programs in the 1970s. The movement encompasses many different kinds of programs, which reflect a wide variety of approaches and methods. The various approaches are based on common assumptions, including:

> All families need support, regardless of economic status or specific concerns.
> The availability of social networks, mutual aid and peer groups, is essential to the family's ability to enhance the child's development.
> Information on child development, obtained both formally and informally, assists families in their child rearing role.
> Support programs increase the family's ability to cope rather than increasing the family's dependence.
> Providing support during the first years of a child's life serves a preventive function.
> Since families are part of a community, their needs cannot be met in isolation from it. (Family Resource Coalition, Fall 1981, Reprinted in America's Family Support Programs)

The Office for Children's goal in publishing this Family Support Services Directory is to strengthen Massachusetts families by identifying resources to support families in their caretaking role.

Supporting families is also one of the primary goals of the Children's Trust Fund. The Trust Fund recognizes that the quality of family life, in turn, is inextricably dependent upon and affected by the quality of community resources, services and social supports. Child maltreatment stems in part from breakdowns in parenting and family functioning and in part from the weak community support for families. (It's Never Too Soon: A Blueprint for Preventing Child Abuse by Strengthening Massachusetts Families, Massachusetts Children's Trust Fund, September, 1989)

Unfortunately, although these listings represent a good beginning, they are limited in many communities. Some of the services target very defined populations. Most can serve only small numbers of people. Due to fiscal constraints some of these programs may experience a decrease in funds in the coming months and others already have long waiting lists for their services.

These services can be the basis to develop the range of family support services needed in each Massachusetts community. We must sustain these programs and create new ones. The Councils for Children in Fiscal Year 1991, in partnership with the Children's Trust Fund, will sponsor volunteer-based parent support and education groups, parent aide and in-home visitor programs for parents of young children. The Councils welcome interested volunteers. Please call the area Office for Children Community Representative for more information.

The Children's Trust Fund is the private/public collaboration for family support and child abuse prevention policy and program development in Massachusetts. Interested individuals may learn more about the Trust Fund by calling 617-727-8900 x 149.

Content and Use of the Directory

The directory begins with an explanation of each of the service categories included. It then lists services by the geographic region in which they are located. Because programs often serve towns in regions beyond the one in which they are located, it is important to check neighboring regions, too.

A map at the end of this directory and at the beginning of each regional listing shows the geographic regions used by the Office for Children. Note that there are five regions, numbered I, II, III, V, and VI. There is no Region IV.

Within each region, services are listed in the following order:

- Parent Support Groups
- Homemakers
- Helplines
- Parent Aides
- Parent Education Groups
- In-home Visitors.

Agencies are listed in alphabetical order within each service category. Programs that are part of a larger or parent agency are listed under that agency. Only services offered through organizations are listed. Services of individuals are not included.

A single program may appear several times in the directory because it is listed under each service it offers. For example, if a program offers parent aides and parent education groups, it is listed under both categories.

For each program, the following information is included when relevant:

- Sex, age, or referral requirements for eligibility, if any.

- Provisions to make the program more accessible for people with disabilities, if any. A listing that reads "Access: Wheelchair" means that the facility is wheelchair accessible. "TTY" means that the program has telephone access for people who are deaf.

- Languages other than English, if any, spoken by staff.

- Limits to the geographic area served by the program. If no limits are given, the program serves surrounding communities to the extent that people are willing and able to travel.

- Target populations, if any, are specified by the program.

These listings include programs for all parents, and for parents considered to be at risk of committing child abuse or neglect. If included in the directory, programs that only accept parents referred by the Department of Social Services--the state agency responsible for services after abuse or neglect have been identified--at times receive these referrals for children at risk, before abuse has occurred. The directory does not include programs that serve parents only after abuse or neglect has been identified.

A section of additional resources includes Head Start administrative offices, Child Care Resource and Referral agencies and Office for Children area offices. Head Start Administrative offices are listed because Head Start programs provide parent support services for participants. For child care information, contact the appropriate Child Care Resource and Referral agency. For further information about these and other services for parents in your community, contact your closest OFC area office.

Description of the Service Categories Used in this Directory

Parent Support Groups

Parents join support groups to share information and provide help and encouragement to each other on issues relating to their caretaking role. The groups are voluntary and flexible, with the content determined by participants.

Support groups may be composed of parents of young children or parents of adolescents. They may be single parents, mothers of premature babies, new mothers, older mothers, or teen mothers. The groups may provide tips on raising children, leads for finding clothing, baby furniture, or babysitters, discipline strategies, or just time to let off steam and have fun together.

Support groups often begin when parents talk to one another about finding a way to address a need they have, such as a play group for their children or time to be with other parents away from their children. This group then becomes a vehicle to support each other in their parenting role. Not all groups begin this "self-help" way. Some groups are formed because an agency or organization in the community initiates a meeting to help interested parents find one another.

Some parent support groups are run by a professional facilitator such as a counselor. In some cases, a parent and professional may co-lead a group. If a group is associated with a community organization or parent center, it is often led by a trained group leader. If a counseling agency or clinic sponsors the group, it is likely that a therapist facilitates the group. In any case, a parent support group is not group therapy; it is a group designed to provide mutual support.

If you are seeking a specialized support group for parents of children with a specific disability, mental illness, drug or alcohol problem, call your closest Office for Children (see listings in this directory). Child Welfare Specialists in Office for Children area offices maintain listings of local disability related groups. You may also call the Information Center for Individuals with Disabilities (ICID) at 727-5540 (Voice) or 1-800-462-5015 (TTY/Voice). ICID maintains statewide listings of disability related groups.

Another specialized need for parents at risk of abuse or neglect of their child may be met through participation in a Parents Anonymous group. Call 1-800-882-1250 for assistance in finding a local Parents Anonymous group.

Homemakers

A homemaker is a supervised professional or trained volunteer who assists parents with daily chores on a temporary basis. This service usually is for parents who have medical or mental health needs, who have children with medical needs, or who are at risk of child abuse or neglect.

Often this service is provided by a home health care agency. A paid professional or volunteer who acts as a homemaker may or may not be a nurse.

Helplines

Helplines provide information and support to parents by telephone. Few helplines for general parent support actually exist in the state of Massachusetts. Those that do exist often provide information and referral services for parents as well as take the time to listen to a parent and help them sort out concerns about their caretaking roles. Some helplines are very specific in the population served; for example, for battered women.

All parents who feel they need support or help may call the Parental Stress Line at 1-800-632-8188.

Specialized helplines also exist in some communities for parents of children with disabilities. For assistance in locating a specialized helpline, call the Child Welfare Specialist in the Office for Children closest to you (see listings in this directory) or the Information Center for Individuals with Disabilities (ICID) at 727-5540 (Voice) or 1-800-462-5015 (TTY/Voice).

Parent Aides

Parents may use parent aide services to learn parenting or homemaking skills, to understand how to find other resources to meet basic needs such as medical care or to have a companion for conversation and relaxation.

Parent Aides provide one-to-one support and companionship to parents. Parent aides are trained and supervised to develop long term trusting relationships. The aides are available to model positive parenting roles. A major part of their role, however, is to provide support to the parent which in turn builds self-esteem and encourages nurturing qualities in the parent.

Parent aide services are designed for parents who need one-to-one attention and education to assist them in caring for their child. These parents may be significantly isolated in their communities, they may be in their teens, or have a history of difficulty caring for themselves or their children. They may be experiencing unusual stress. Some may have children who require extra care because of medical needs or disabilities.

Parent aides may be paid professionals or trained volunteers. The more difficult the parent's issues, the more likely a paid professional will be matched to the parent, though not in all cases. Some services, however, will match both a volunteer and paid professional to one parent to serve different purposes.

Note: See also the In-Home Visitor section of this directory, since it is a service similar to parent aide.

Parent Education Groups

Parent or family life education groups focus on a course of study to teach skills to parents in a time-limited small group or tutorial setting. Skills taught may include child development, predictable developmental crises, positive discipline techniques, non-violent conflict resolution, budgeting, stress management, nutrition. Courses may specialize in parenting young children or adolescents. Some parent education may be designed to meet a specific need, such as how to teach sexuality to children or how to parent children who have experienced the abuse of their mother by a male father figure in the home. Often the content is developed with the parents.

The timeframe for parent education varies. Some groups meet over a period of months or weeks. Scheduling may be incorporated into a parent support group's activities or only as a separate course for parents interested in a particular course of study. Some one-to-one education is conducted in the home, often in conjunction with parent aide or in-home visitor programs.

NOTE - Head Start provides parent education as a part of its preschool program. A listing in this Directory identifies Head Start administrative office numbers for more information.

In-Home Visitors

In-home visitors are paid professionals or trained volunteers who provide information and support to parents and/or healthy baby screening through visits with expectant parents, in the maternity ward and the home during the first months of a child's life.

Often these services are provided by a visiting nurse association, a hospital or other agency. If an in-home visitor is associated with a health care agency or hospital, paid professionals will emphasize the health care aspect, such as healthy baby screening or monitoring of special medical needs. Other in-home visitors provided by human service agencies may teach parenting skills and provide other information, possibly through a trained and supervised volunteer. Skills taught and information provided may include bathing and feeding the baby, common infant medical problems, and other services for new parents.

In-home visitors may provide services similar to the parent aide. It is important to review the Parent Aide section in combination with this section.
